16. Describe the types of decisions made independently in this position and tell who or what is affected by those decisions.

It is the responsibility of this position to determine the type of claim for which the claimant is potentially eligible and, therefore should file. If that information is incorrect, it will almost always delay the decision on the claim and, if otherwise eligible and qualified, claimants' benefit payment.

This position assists the claimant in completing quarterly wage affidavits, which are used to establish a claim in the absence of wage information from the employer. When assisting, this position must decide, based on law and procedure, which wages qualify to be used in the computation of unemployment benefits. If the information is incorrect, the result can be restitution of benefits paid based on the wage affidavit.

This position determines, based on the situation presented by the claimant and further questioning, what additional referrals may be made to assist the claimant. Inappropriate decisions, regarding which agencies claimant should be referred, can be result in a delay of assistance for the claimant or, the claimant not receiving the additional assistance available.

This position must properly identify the issues of a case in order to decide what portions of the Michigan Employment Security Act apply. If this identification is correct, the determination issued will also be incorrect. Although the claimant or employer has the right to protest such determination, this is a time-consuming process and if the claimant would have been eligible for benefits, the claimant's payments are also delayed.

This position is responsible for determining that the fact finding on a contested claim or questionable issue is complete. If a (re) determination is made with insufficient information, it can lead to an erroneous conclusion. This could cause benefits payable to a claimant to be delayed, or benefits incorrectly paid to a claimant, thereby increasing the charges to an employer account.

17. Describe the types of decisions that require the supervisor's review.

The backdating of a claim, without a claimant statement and an accompanying non-monetary determination requires supervisory review (and approval) at the lower levels of this position.

The payment of any weeks other than the prior two weeks, without a claimant statement and an accompanying non-monetary determination, requires a supervisory review (and approval) at the lower levels of this position.

Essentially the higher levels of this position work independently and do not require any specific reviews of decisions made in the course of the work, unless directed otherwise in a particular situation. However, the position may often consult with supervision on claims cases in situations such as: the fact finding produces extremely difficult sets of information from the employer and the claimant, making the identification of the issue and the decision complicated; fact finding results in a potential internal security issue that must be handled and referred with strict confidentiality, requiring the involvement of supervision.

18. What kind of physical effort is used to perform this job? What environmental conditions in this position physically exposed to on the job? Indicate the amount of time and intensity of each activity and condition. Refer to instructions.

This position can experience sudden high levels of unemployment, large numbers of claimants to service at one time by telephone, and dramatic increase or fluctuation without warning in the unemployment claims workload. Usually higher levels of unemployment and workloads result in an increase in the number of customers to be services and issues to adjudicate. This causes large numbers of claims cases to be pending; which results in considerable overtime during the week, on weekends and holidays; and more pressure to elevate production. In addition, these fluctuations can last weeks to several months causing stressful working conditions.

Due to the nature of the work, this position must interact by telephone with claimants who are unemployed or employers who are concerned about their tax rates. As results, this may cause claimants to be anxious, irate, and despondent over the loss of a job or their financial situation or the employers to be anxious or irate because of the tax rate. This position has direct contact with both the agency staff and those they service daily-claimants, employers, and the public. This can be a very stressful and intense environment in which to work during the course of the work week.

Use of personal computer for data entry and other work related duties.

Use of hands-free headset while obtaining and data entering customer information for claims processing may be required.

Repetitive hand and arm movements while using computer keyboard may occur.

Extended periods of restricted movement in a small work area may occur.

Some travel may be required.
